

Dr. Lori Wik is a general internist who studied at the University of Alberta. She has been working as a rural general internist since 2011 in Cranbrook, BC and has been an assistant clinical professor with UBC for the past 10 years. Dr. Wik is passionate about teamwork and being innovative in building systems of care that provide excellent care to patients regardless of where they live. Dr. Wik has been part of the creation of several regional chronic disease programs including heart function and COPD/asthma clinics in the BC region. Dr. Wik also loves spending time outdoors and biking.